

Substances of very high concern, such as carcinogens or endocrine disruptors, are under increasing regulatory pressure. We can assist you in preparing a required application for REACH authorization on the use of such substances.

This application is complex: we update the risk assessment, assist in performing the analysis of alternatives and create a convincing socio-economic analysis. This is carried out together with you, the client, because you know your processes, situations and options best. We act as a trusted third party and can ensure appropriate anonymization and data compilation for when you need to cooperate with other parties. With your input, our experience regarding the wishes and requirements of authorities and our knowledge of the methods and tools needed to perform the analyses, a highly compelling case can be submitted. The more convincing the case, the longer the review period (the period until the application is renewed) can be.

REACH authorization applications require detailed information and are therefore very complex. Substantial input from the applicant is needed. We help to define your strategy and process, gather and analyze relevant information and submit it in an appropriate form. We can also assist in communication with the authorities and provide input for consultation processes.

Within the scope of an application for authorization, we can develop:

- An updated Chemical Safety Report, including an analysis of measured exposure levels at relevant facilities – the basis for the application
- An Analysis of Alternatives, combining your technical knowledge with our knowledge of the requirements and wishes of authorities
- A Socio-Economic Analysis, which is required if safe use cannot be demonstrated but is often also helpful if safe use is possible

In case legal proceedings are necessary, we can help develop the scientific part of the argumentation.

REACH authorizations vary substantially according to the situation of the applicant(s) involved, so we always customize our services to your needs. You benefit from our short communication lines and a central point of contact.
